1. The attempt has been made to list in alphabetical order all identified personalities holding officer's, especially senior officer's rank, in the RAD. The list cannot be regarded as complete.

2. Ranks held and posts filled are not always certain beyond any doubt and two persons may be found entered as holding the identical post or command.

This is partly due to undated source material and partly due to the fact that transfers as well as promotions are frequent and information on them is not always available.

Reference should be made for commanders etc. of units to the Order of Battle in Annexe A, which will in some cases conflict with information in the WHO'S WHO.

A considerable number of RAD officers may be expected to have been transferred to the Wehrmacht since about January 1944.

3. German titles, ranks and designations have been retained in most cases. Only in some cases could an approximate translated version be given. Any attempt to translate all German terms would have resulted in misinterpretation.

Reference should be made for translations, to standard publications, including the EDS/G series, and the EDS CI Handbook for Germany, which contains an abbreviations glossary.

4. Dates shown in parentheses indicate the date of source material, when this was available.

Following rank designations, dates indicate time of promotion, or award of seniority.

5. A list of abbreviations used in the WHO'S WHO is given for convenience in this Annexe. It partly overlaps, and partly supplements the abbreviations list in Annexe E.

6. For purpose of alphabetical listing, the normal German usage has been followed, of treating the modified vowels ä, ö, ü as though spelt ae, oe, ue: for example, ä immediately precedes af.

FOREWORD

Throughout the war the Reich Labour Service for Men has served the Wehrmacht field forces and its units are now committed to action with increasing frequency.

With more than 300 Gruppen (Groups), each having an average strength of 1,000 men, the Reichsarbeitsdienst is estimated to have a total strength of about 300,000 men. In the spring of 1944, these Gruppen were composed of more than 2,000 Abteilungen (Detachments), each made up of 150 officers and men.

This total may however, have been somewhat reduced by the current man-power drive in the Reich; but it is believed that in September 1944 the RAD for men had a total membership of not less than 250,000.

In Greater Germany the RAD maintains more than 2,500 Headquarters, control staffs, unit posts, schools, training centres, depots and subsidiary establishments.

The RAD for Women, although only about half as strong numerically as the RAD for Men, is organised along similar lines. It is an auxiliary formation within whose ranks the Allied Authorities must reckon with a high degree of fanaticism.

Members of the RAD swear an oath of fealty to HITLER, as follows:

> "I swear: I will show unswerving loyalty to the Führer of the German Reich and People, Adolf HITLER, to act in absolute obedience to him, and to those leaders appointed by him; to fulfill my duties conscientiously, and to be a good comrade of all other members of the German Labour Service".

For the occupying forces the entire German Labour Service may well pose a counter-intelligence problem of considerable importance since Nazi indoctrination has been carried out within its framework to a far-reaching degree, most of its members having been schooled in the Nazi creed ever since they were in the Hitler Jugend (Hitler Youth Organisation).

The Regime of the Third Reich has done everything possible to win over and dominate German youth, and HITLER himself has stated repeatedly that youth must be afforded all possible preferential treatment.

In addition, a German youth aged sixteen or seventeen has not fully experienced the horrors of war and is likely to be imbued with all the "heroic" aspects of soldiering as well as with a fanatical belief in the Führer's providential mission, in "German honour and destiny," and all the other precepts of Nazi ideology. In only a few cases is he the disillusioned adolescent already serving in the Waffen SS or the Wehrmacht at the front. He suffers only spiritually the "torture and indignity of retreat." He does not realise that Germany has lost the war.

The regional distribution of permanent RAD Headquarters offers to him and to his professional officers a ready network for post-hostilities underground activities and provides him with a system for evading demobilisation demands enforced by the Allies, once Germany has lost at home and in the field. (Not less than 350 higher RAD headquarters and echelons are permanently maintained in Germany proper and are professionally staffed.)

On the other hand, the RAD is a ready instrument for reconstruction work in occupied countries once these have been freed, and it could be used in Germany itself for the maintenance or reconstruction of vital utilities, or the demolition of military installations.

There is also the possibility that the Allies could enlist the youth of Germany into the RAD to avoid unemployment and consequent unrest, provided that the German Labour Service were reconstructed so that it no longer represented a potential source of disaffection.

The RAD, when transformed into an instrument of peace, could easily become a valuable educational factor in post-war Germany.

PART I

DEVELOPMENT AND FUNCTIONS OF THE RAD

1. Origin of the RAD

The RAD had its origin in the Voluntary National Socialist Labour Service, which was created by the National Socialist Party in 1931. This was not the only organisation of its kind in Germany, the Brüning Government having started a Voluntary Labour Service as an emergency depression measure at about the same time.
Neither of these organisations acquired great importance until HITLER came to power on 30 January 1933, when the Government-sponsored labour service was absorbed into that of the Party.
Simultaneously the Voluntary National Socialist Labour Service expanded vigorously, and plans were laid to make it a permanent Government institution with a legal basis of its own and service in it compulsory.

On 2 January 1933 HITLER had appointed Colonel (now Reichsarbeitsführer) Konstantin HIERL to deal with all questions concerning Party labour service.

On 1 May 1933 HITLER announced his intention of introducing a universal compulsory labour service. HIERL was appointed State Secretary for the Labour Service in the Ministry of the Interior, and proceeded at once to form his high command, the Reichsleitung für den Arbeitsdienst, which corresponds to the present Reichsarbeitsdienstleitung (Reich Labour Service High Command).
On 15 May 1933 HIERL founded the Academy for the Labour Service, known as the Reichsschule. This was soon followed by the establishment of training centres and schools for RAD officers of intermediate and lower grades.

2. Status

On 26 June 1935 the Reich Labour Service Law was enacted. It created the obligatory Reichsarbeitsdienst (RAD), gave it a full official status within the government, and made six months of labour service compulsory for all Germans.

The RAD is headed by the Reichsarbeitsführer (RAF, or Commander-in-Chief of the Reich Labour Service) HIERL. Originally, the RAD formed part of the Ministry of the Interior and HIERL was, therefore, subordinated to Wilhelm FRICK, then Minister of the Interior.
This situation continued until 20 August 1943 when Heinrich HIMMLER, in addition to his other functions, became Reich Minister of the Interior. The RAD was then separated from this Ministry and HIERL was made a new Oberste Reichsbehörde (Supreme Reich Authority). As such, HIERL has the title, rank and authority of a Reich Minister and is subordinate only to HITLER.
It is believed that HIERL was given this independent status because of the latent rivalry between him and HIMMLER.

The Reich Labour Service Law made the Reichsarbeitsdienst a part of the State. It is now a separate Government organisation with its own administrative and penal law. According to the decree, compulsory labour service renders all male and female Germans liable for service. The RAD, the decree also stated, shall be used for all types of public works.

The permanent members of the RAD are public officials, and their rank and pay corresponds to that of officers in the Armed Forces or civil servants.

Financially, the RAD is maintained from the general budget of the Reich. The RAD has never published a budget, its receipts and expenses appearing under the appropriate headings of the general budget.

Although Hitler, in an order on 26 June 1935, fixed the strength of the RAD at 200,000 men, plans were announced on 26 September 1936 for an increase on the following schedule:

by 1 October 1937 to 230,000 men
by 1 October 1938 to 275,000 men
by 1 October 1939 to 300,000 men.

Actually the strength of the Reich Labour Service for Men on 1 September, 1939, amounted to 360,000 men, including all permanent officials and administrative personnel.

3. Relationship between RAD and Nazi Party

When the RAD was established in 1935, as an independent state organisation, its official subordination to the Party ceased, but the close relationship between them continued almost unchanged. Reichsarbeitsführer HIERL and his principal collaborators, although mostly former Army officers, were convinced National Socialists who had held important offices within the Party for several years.

HIERL himself proclaimed: "Our goal must be the building up of the Reichsarbeitsdienst in such a manner that it will be said: It is in this organisation that the spirit of National Socialism has found its clearest and purest expression."

The permanent influence of the Party over the RAD was assured through the provision that all its senior officers --- from the rank of Arbeitsführer (Major) upwards --- were to be appointed and dismissed only by Hitler himself after each case had been reviewed by the Führer's Deputy.

Equally significant was the provision of the Reich Labour Service Law according to which any member of the RAD who had been sentenced to an extended prison term or who had been expelled from the Party would automatically be excluded from the RAD.

Finally, the appointment of HIERL as one of the Reichsleiter der NSDAP (Member of the highest Party directorate) in 1936 was a further sign of the close co-operation between the two organisations. The result is that the RAD is glorified today as one of the showpieces of practical National Socialism.

4. Economic Functions of the RAD

Like similar organisations in other countries, the German Labour Service was originally designed to create work for the young unemployed and to use their labour for carrying out long-term projects in the public interest which could not be accomplished by private enterprise or financed in the normal way. This purpose fitted naturally into the programme of National Socialism, with its emphasis on the relation between the people and the soil.

In the years before the war the RAD undertook the following major projects:

reclaiming of land along the sea coast (SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN);
draining of swamps (EMSLAND, RHIN- UND HAVELLUCH, SPROTTEBRUCH);
preparing waste lands for cultivation (HÖHE RHÖN); irrigation and flood control; reafforestation.

In addition, the RAD assisted farmers with the harvest, built country roads, and prepared new settlements.

All these projects were undertaken with the additional purpose of increasing the arable surface and yield of the farmland, thereby reducing Germany's dependence on the importation of foodstuffs.

When the need for manpower in the armament industry grew acute, RAD units were attached to various plants to alleviate this shortage. Their period of attachment often extended throughout the whole of the RAD service, e.g., six months or a year, and in cases of special necessity they were even retained beyond the regular RAD term of service.

Their tasks were menial, and not technical. A great portion of their work was given to construction.

In addition to the economic functions already considered, the RAD gradually secured a commanding position in the German timber industry. This had its origin in the early days of the RAD when there was need for huts and camps for the men.

Dr. KÜNZEL of the RAD took the initiative and formed a timber construction trust. In June, 1940, all German timber construction firms were organised in a national cartel and KÜNZEL became controller of German timber construction and virtual dictator of the entire timber industry. His official function is Leiter des deutschen Holzbauzwangsverbandes und Bevollmächtigter f. d. Holzhausbau (Director of the German Government-Imposed Timber Construction Trust and Plenipotentiary for Timber Construction).

5. Educational and Political Functions.

The works undertaken by the RAD were carried out chiefly by hand, using pick and shovel as the principal tools, with a minimum of dredges and heavy or mechanical equipment, since the projects were undertaken for their educational value.

The Reich Labour Service Law states:

"The Labour Service is an honour and is undertaken for the sake of the German people. It aims at educating German youth in the spirit of the National Socialist community concept and teaching them the right attitude of respect for manual labour."

Thus the work to which the men were put was to be manual and of such a simple nature that everybody could learn it in a short time.

In addition to teaching physical endurance and strict discipline, the RAD set out to incalcate the National Socialist ideology. HITLER called the RAD the "higher education of the German people", which was to give every young man a lasting experience of subordinating himself to the purposes of the National Socialist community, and prevent class consciousness.

6. Military Functions.

Apart from the direct services to the Armed Forces performed by the RAD since the outbreak of the war, which are more fully discussed in Part II of this text, the training given was always definitely military, even though it consisted only of simple formation drilling. It accustomed the men to military discipline and, coupled with the hard physical labour has contributed in very large measure to the fitness and vigour of German youth.

The work accomplished by the RAD was a substantial military contribution even in peace time. RAD labour was employed to a considerable extent in building Germany's strategic roads and fortifications in the East and West. RAD units formed the nucleus of the construction battalions of the Army and Air Force at the outbreak of the war.

Immediately before the invasion of Poland seventy-five RAD detachments were sent to East Prussia in order to finish the harvest in the frontier districts before 10 August 1939.

7. The RAD as an Instrument of Foreign Policy.

In addition to its political mission among the German people the Labour Service was used from the beginning as an instrument for spreading the ideas of National Socialism abroad, thus furthering German foreign policy.

In 1933 and 1934 it was employed as a propaganda agency for the Saar Plebiscite. The Arbeitsmann, official organ of the RAD, stated:

> "It had been recognised in time that the Labour Service was an exceptionally suitable medium for bringing the young men of the Saar district closer to the new Germany. Joining the Labour Service was therefore actively promoted, even if it meant that many young Germans had to be refused at that time for lack of accommodation. Within eighteen months this so-called Saar Labour Service comprised more than 20,000 young Saar Germans who, after completing their service in various parts of the Reich, returned home and agitated in the towns and in the country of the Saarland for Anschluss with Germany."

Like the SS and SA, the RAD established in most German-occupied countries parallel Labour Services modelled on the RAD, and strove to maintain these international contacts.

After the German occupation of major parts of Scandinavia, Western Europe and the Baltic States and the German penetration into the Balkans, the RAD was used to consolidate the spiritual hold of Germany over the people of these countries.

The RAD was specifically charged by Hitler with the mission of training the prospective labour commanders of these countries by means of special courses so that they could establish similar labour services at home. These commanders were further assisted by groups of instructors sent out by the RAD and by close liaison with permanent representatives of the Reichsarbeitsführer who were appointed for each of the countries concerned. There is, however, no direct subordination of these organisations in satellite countries to the RAD, only an "ideological affiliation."

8. Labour Services outside Germany.

Labour Services were progressively established in Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Croatia and Roumania. In addition, young men from the Baltic States were encouraged, and later compelled, to serve in the RAD, which often provided sufficient impetus to induce them later to join one of the Waffen SS legions formed in their respective countries.

In France the Vichy Government instituted the Chantiers de la Jeunesse, which worked in part for the German O.T. on fortifications.

The leaders of the Dutch Labour Service (NAD), its Flemish parallel (VAVV) and its Walloon sister organisation (SVTW) were trained in RAD schools in Germany, mainly those at QUERUM (Braunschweig) and CALW (Württemberg). These organisations follow closely the pattern of the RAD, but their indoctrination programme was only partly successful. In May, 1942, however, Dutch (NAD) members volunteered to fight on the Russian front and, having taken the oath to "Adolf HITLER, the Leader of all Teutons", donned German uniforms.

The leaders of the Balkan Labour Services in Croatia, Serbia and Roumania are also trained in Germany. Croatian Labour Service officers began training in July, 1943. Roumanian officers and NCO's who had received their training in the Reich became instructors at a school in BREAZA (Roumania), which was founded in 1942.

Due to the fact that the various Balkan labour services retain a highly nationalistic spirit, they are somewhat less subject to German supervision and direct influence, although they are strictly modelled on the RAD.

In Bulgaria there exists no real labour service, although the Brannik (Youth Organisation), comparable to the German HJ (Hitler Youth), is charged with tasks not unlike those of the RAD.

In the OSTLAND (Baltic countries), Latvians, Estonians, and Lithuanians serve normally in the RAD in Germany or in the German RAD in their home countries. The lack of volunteers caused the introduction of conscription. In June, 1943, 20,000 Estonian men and women were reported to have served in the Reich Labour Service. Nationals of Estonia and Latvia may, however, enter the Waffen SS instead of the RAD.

Lithuanian men and women born in the years 1919 to 1924, on the other hand, must join the German RAD. The only other non-Germans serving in the German RAD are individual Volksdeutsche ("racial" Germans).

PART II

WARTIME EMPLOYMENT OF THE RAD

9. Employment under Military Control (1939)

At the outbreak of war the majority of RAD detachments then in existence were taken over by the Armed Forces in accordance with pre-arranged plans. Some detachments were kept intact, but the majority were absorbed into Bau-Bataillone (Construction Battalions) and as such were attached to units of the Army and the Air Force.

These battalions had an average strength of about 2,000 men, and consisted of four Bau-Kompanien (Construction Companies) and three Bau-Kolonnen (Construction Columns). Each company had a strength of about 400 men, and in order to arrive at this establishment, the original RAD Abteilungen (detachments) of about 220 men were complemented with untrained men of twenty-five to forty-five years of age. (Ersatz Reserve II and Landwehr II).

The battalions were grouped under Abschnittsbaustäbe (Sector Construction Staffs), which in turn were controlled by Oberbaustäbe (Higher Construction Staffs). These units were organised into motorised construction units, construction companies, construction columns, heavy road building companies, railway construction companies, supply companies, Air Force construction companies, etc.

These construction units prepared the way for the engineers, and did the pick and shovel work under their technical direction. Their mission was to assist troops in every way short of combat.

During the campaign in Poland their work consisted largely in repairing roads and bridges and clearing railways to enable the Wehrmacht supply units to keep up with the rapid advance of the German armies. It is reported that some motorised units, composed entirely of RAD men, repaired about 600 miles of road in little more than twenty days, and that other detachments marched 150 miles in ten days in addition to repairing roads and removing obstacles.

The construction units were sometimes sent to the front lines to clear the roads for the supporting artillery; or, if they were attached to the Air Force, went with the advance parties in order to repair the newly-won airfields.

In addition they brought up supplies, collected and sorted captured material, and helped with harvests.

10. Role as an Independent Organisation (1940)

In December, 1939, HITLER ordered the RAD to revert to its original form, and to carry out its war-time duties as an independent organisation. This again made service in the RAD a prerequisite for service with the Armed Forces, so far as the 1920 and younger classes were concerned.

The decree meant that RAD detachments, composed entirely of young men of one age group, worked on their military auxiliary assignments under their own commanders and according to the rules and schedules set up by the RAD.

While no definite rule appears to exist with regard to the number of detachments which make up a group in war-time, it was usually found that, for maximum efficiency, one RAD group in the field should consist of four detachments. Experience showed that groups of five or six detachments were too large and unwieldy for the average assignments.

In 1940 at least 900 RAD detachments were sent out in several waves to follow the troops in all campaigns - Norway, Holland, Belgium and France. In these offensives they did more or less the same work as during the Polish campaign.

In the West, however, where the road network was in much better condition, emphasis was laid on securing an uninterrupted flow of supplies, especially for the motorised units of the Wehrmacht. In addition, a large number of detachments were employed in repairing and constructing airfields and servicing aircraft, especially in the period of preparation for and during the Battle of Britain. They were also employed by the German Navy in building coastal fortifications and gun emplacements. Some RAD detachments took part in the campaigns in the Balkans and in Greece, but the majority were held in readiness for the attack against Russia.

11. Equipment

All the men were now furnished with infantry weapons, ammunition, and steel helmets; signal equipment was issued to some units. Often they were mounted on bicycles and had motorised supply trains.

The motorisation at least at the beginning of the campaign in Russia was very haphazard, and only five RAD groups, each with three detachments and all assigned to the First Panzer Army in the Ukraine, were completely motorised in 1941.

In 1939 the RAD had been equipped with Karabiner 98 and Pistole 08. Truppführer and higher ranks carried pistols. At that time the instruction on these weapons was not thorough enough to make front-line soldiers of RAD men.

In Russia the RAD had the same equipment and small arms as the Wehrmacht, but they did not know how to use the heavier equipment taken from the battlefield. The machine guns issued to the RAD personnel consisted of German MGs 34 and Polish Browning LMGS. Usually 2 LMGs were issued to each Zug.

From 1933 to 1939 no vehicles had been assigned to the RAD. Whenever the need arose, vehicles were obtained by requisitioning. The only means of transport was the bicycle. By 1939 the RAD was fully equipped with Lastkraftwagen (Motor Trucks). The following is a list of vehicles usually found in an Abteilung:

1 PKW (passenger car) for the Abt. Führer
A number of LKW (motor trucks) the actual number depending upon the particular need.
1 Motorcycle
1 Bicycle per man
3 horses
2 wagons
1 field kitchen (the wagons and field kitchen being horse-drawn).

The foregoing table of equipment applied to those units stationed in the West, where units remained more or less static. In the East the equipment of RAD units varied according to their particular tasks.

12. Campaign in Russia

Details about the number or distribution of the detachments in Russia are lacking, but the following Higher RAD Commanders were identified during 1941-1942.

Generalarbeitsführer EISENBECK (now inspector for RAD Inspectorate Northeast, and/or commander of Arbeitsgau I), probably on the northern sector of the Russian front.

Generalarbeitsführer Dr. WAGNER (now commander of Arbeitsgau II), who succeeded Obergeneralarbeitsführer SCHINNERER (now commander of Arbeitsgau XXXI) in an unknown command in the east.

Generalarbeitsführer ROCH (commander of Arbeitsgau X) who with thirteen RAD groups, (fifty-two detachments), was attached to Army Group South.

Generalarbeitsführer SCHMEIDLER (now Inspector of the Bureau for Administration and Finance), who commanded the five motorised RAD groups, (fifteen detachments), which were attached to the First Panzer Army.

Generalarbeitsführer BAND (now Inspector of RAD Inspectorate Southeast, and/or commander of Arbeitsgau XXXV), and Generalarbeitsführer PFROGNER (now commander of Arbeitsgau XXXVII) were both attached to the Air Force.

Generalarbeitsführer SIMON (now Inspector of RAD Inspectorate Centre, and/or commander of Arbeitsgau XIV) and Generalarbeitsführer TRIEBEL (now Commander of Arbeitsgau III) controlled all RAD units employed in the rear areas and zones of communications of the eastern front.

It was stressed that RAD units in Russia should be employed primarily for building and repair work, for which their training and equipment fitted them best. In a report on their activities the following types of work were enumerated, affording a good picture of their versatility:

Building and repairing roads needed for the advancing troops.

Building, repairing, and reinforcing bridges.

Building corduroy roads in swampy terrain.

Building piers for ferries and pontoons.

Aiding the troops in moving vehicles which had broken down on the road.

Reconnoitring roads right up to the front lines and scouting for building materials.

Felling trees and preparing them for use by the signal troops as telegraph poles.

Helping in the loading and unloading of ammunition.

Guarding prisoners of war.

Guarding essential public utilities until the specialised troops which were to take them over had arrived.

Collecting and guarding captured equipment.

13. Combatant Rule

While generally following the troops, the RAD men were frequently in the front line and on several occasions they took part in the fighting.

The first instance of their part in actual combat was the drive on Moscow in 1942. They also crossed the Dnieper in assault barges, took part in the bayonet charge that established the bridgehead, afterwards building, under fire, the landing piers for ferries and pontoons.

In the winter of 1942 about 1,600 RAD men went into action near RZHEV to stop a Russian breakthrough. They had only rifles and did not know how to use the heavier equipment.

On the Kuban front, in the Caucasus, the RAD also took part in front-line fighting, and the German press was filled with reports glorifying the exemplary conduct of these seventeen or eighteen-year-old boys, many of whom received Wehrmacht decorations.

Toward the end of 1941 when the German offensive in Russia came to a standstill, the majority of the RAD detachments returned to Germany, dismissed their men, and prepared for their new employment in 1942, though the detachments in the Ukraine and in northern Finland remained there until April and July, 1942, respectively.

In one instance at least, men who had served in the RAD for about a year were taken into the Army at the end of the winter of 1941/42 while still in southern Russia, without being sent home for redrafting through the regular replacement system because, it was explained, "they were now accustomed to the privations and hardships, and as a token of appreciation for their work."

14. Peak Year (1942)

It appears that the year 1942 saw the peak of the total field strength of the RAD. The age limit for entrance into the Labour Service was reduced first to seventeen and then to sixteen and a half. Of all mobilised detachments 90% were working for the Armed Forces; half of these were in Russia, the majority on the southern sector.

Based on the experiences of 1941, RAD detachments were divided into static and mobile units. The static detachments were employed on those sectors of the front where no major movements were anticipated, whereas the mobile detachments, mounted on bicycles, followed the advancing units of the Army and Air Force, though both static and mobile detachments were used for similar puposes.

While in general the mobile detachments were close to the front lines, the static units also sometimes found themselves in the combat zone. Special mention is made of their assistance in repulsing the Russian attacks on RZHEV, where a number of detachments "gave a good account of themselves and their military training."

In the autumn of 1942 the work of the RAD detachments as such was brought to a close and - now apparently a general practice - the young men were dismissed behind the front lines and absorbed into the Army or Air Force.

In December, 1942, some detachments were sent to Greece, while others started building fortifications in the formerly unoccupied parts of France. These detachments probably belonged to the new class (1925) which had just been called up.

15. Defence Work (1943)

In December, 1942, HITLER ordered that the whole of the last class (1925) was to go straight into the RAD. Not much is known about their employment, but it appears that more detachments were sent to France in 1943 than during the previous year. They built coastal fortifications on the Mediterranean and along the western coast of France (Atlantikwall).

The RAD men are now completely militarised. In addition to shovel-work, they are taught to lay minefields; they man fortifications, and in case of alarm, they are equipped with rifles, hand grenades and machine guns. Some of the units in France are now supplied with anti-tank guns and trained to defend ridges and to hold roads.

It may be assumed that a substantial number of RAD detachments continue to be employed in the same manner as previously in Russia and in France. In addition the heavy bombing of Germany has necessitated their employment at home, manning AA batteries, fighting fires, clearing up bomb damage, and building temporary quarters for bombed-out workers.

16. Employment of RAD as Flak Units

The employment of RAD personnel of late arises purely out of military necessity, and their employment in Flak units represents the final phase of their role in the West. It is, however, noteworthy that HITLER had declared in 1941: "Every RAD man is a Soldier."

An RAD Abteilung (detachment) that is to be transferred to Flak usually undergoes a six weeks course at a Flakausbildungsschule (flak training school of the Luftwaffe). Either the entire detachment or a part may attend the course. The instructors at a school of this type are Luftwaffe Flak personnel. A portion of those taking the course receive instruction on height and range-finding instruments, while the remainder are instructed in gunnery.

Upon the completion of the course, the RAD unit, either an entire detachment (Abteilung), or a portion thereof, is sent to an AA unit where it relieves the crew then on duty (in the case of a single position), becomes an integral part of a Flak Regiment. It may take over a flak position completely, in which case the RAD unit assumes the name "RAD-Flak Batterie"; or, finally, it may be converted into a regular Luftwaffe Flak unit; e.g. 1/152 (1st battery of Flak Abteilung 152).

The percentage of RAD and flak personnel in each flak unit varies; but the trend has been for RAD men to be in the majority, (up to 80%).

In the 30th Flak Regiment, for example, the RAD personnel form two complete battalions out of the six. These two battalions (152 and 653) are known as RAD Heavy battalions, and are equipped with 8.8 cm and 10.5 cm AA guns.

17. Control of RAD used as Flak Units

RAD personnel employed in flak units usually draw rations from the nearest Heeresverpflegungsamt (Army Supply Depot) and clothing from the Luftwaffe or the Arbeitsgau. Other supplies and equipment for pick and shovel work are drawn from RAD depots in Germany proper, through the HQ of the Arbeitsgau to which the unit belonged.

In cases where RAD men (still in RAD uniform) were "allotted" in groups to AA batteries of the Luftwaffe, they were often more numerous than the GAF personnel, to such an extent that it was found expedient for the RAD HQ to supply rations to the entire combined unit. When RAD men were in action with one particular flak unit with which they were employed while still in RAD uniforms, the GAF commanding officer had full disciplinary power over the RAD personnel.

On other occasions, however, the commanding RAD officer exercised complete control over all the men, carrying out orders received from the RAD Gruppe, usually located at Battalion HQ.

In other cases double command prevailed and GAF and RAD officers cooperated, the former "at the guns", the latter "in the camp".

18. Legal Position of the RAD in the Field

The RAD holds a special position in the armed forces. Its members are not under the actual jurisiction of the armed forces, and are not classified as soldiers, but in many respects they must be regarded as military personnel.

The RAD in the field is subject to the laws and regulations of the armed forces, and the conduct of its members is judged by the standards of military law. The circumstances of each case, however, determine whether it is to be judged by a military or RAD tribunal.

RAD employment in the firing line, as infantry or reconnaissance troops, especially after their flak guns had to be blown up during the German retreat in Normandy, has caused a number of Allied protests against German tricks transgressing the international codes of Warfare.

RAD men, their armbands removed and their uniform as usual without a Hoheitsabzeichen (Eagle and Swastika) were not recognised as "soldiers" according to international law as their uniform is not registered as that of combatant troops. Definite proof of the fact that RAD officers made their men take off armbands and sleeve insignia "for better camouflage" is on hand for several cases.

In this connection it is noteworthy that RAD officers and NCO's, in other words professional RAD men, considered themselves in most cases as "military personnel" showing their identification discs and pointing out their collar patch and epaulette rank insignia while the RAD men without rating or rank neither considered themselves nor were considered by other Wehrmacht members as Landser i.e. as German soldiers.

Instead of their normal pocket-money of 25 pfennigs a day, members of the RAD on war-time duty are paid according to their rank (officially equalised with Wehrmacht grades) under the provisions of the Einsatz-Wehrmacht-Gebührnis-Gesetz, (War-time Armed Forces Pay Scale), which prescribes the pay of the regular soldiers during war-time.

Civilian workers and employees of the RAD units in the field are paid like those of the Wehrmacht. Members and employees of the RAD likewise enjoy the same status as soldiers with respect to welfare, compensation for disability, and payments to dependents.

19. Decrease in Strength

The need for RAD units in Germany to cope with damage wrought by Allied raids is likely to have reduced the strength of the units in the field. There are, furthermore, indications that the urgent need for recruits for the armed forces is reducing the available supply of young men for the RAD, as those physically best qualified are recruited or induced to volunteer for special branches like the SS or the paratroops.

Under previous regulations those who volunteered for the armed forces had to serve only three months in the RAD, but it appears probable that these volunteers, after passing through the military fitness camps of the Hitler Youth, are now completely exempt from labour service.

Finally, whereas the annual classes of 1920 and 1921, which entered the RAD early in the war, had a strength of well over 700,000 each, the class of 1927, now eligible, numbers barely 600,000.

For all these reasons it is believed that the total strength of RAD units in the field is now materially below that of previous years. On the other hand, their military training, equipment, and high morale, due to thorough indoctrination, make them a defensive force to be reckoned with.

PART III

THE RAD HIGH COMMAND AND REGIONAL CONTROL STAFFS
(See Diagram, Annexe C)

Commander-in-Chief and Staff

20. The Reichsarbeitsführer (RAF or Commander-in-Chief of the RAD), Konstantin HIERL, exercises full control over the German Labour Service. He determines its organisation and the employment of its forces (Arbeitseinsatz) and directs its training and education. He appoints officers of the intermediate and lower grades. All orders issued within the scope of his powers are decrees which are legally in force upon publication in the Reichsverordungsblatt (Official Reich Gazette).

The Reichsleitung des Arbeitsdienstes (RL.d.Arb.D. or RAD High Command, popularly referred to as Reichsarbeitsführung) is organised into nine Ämter (Bureaux), each of which is headed by an Inspekteur (Inspector) who, in turn, is assisted by an Amtschef (Executive Chief of Bureau).

The HQ of the High Command is located at BERLIN-GRÜNEWALD, Schinkelstrasse 1-12.

HIERL has two personal adjutants (Oberfeldmeister ZAELKE and Oberfeldmeister HILLEMANN), and in the direction of the RAD is assisted by a special staff consisting of the Stabschef des RAF (Chief of Staff of the Reichsarbeitsführer) and the Inspekteure or heads of the bureaux.

Three of these bureau heads are not always officially styled Inspekteure but are referred to as Präsident des Rechtshofes, (Chairman of the RAD High Tribunal), Leiter der Schulen, (Director of Schools), and Chef des Presse und Propagandaamtes (chief of the Press and Propaganda Bureau).

The bureaux of the RAD High Command, the officials in charge and the functions and various divisions, are given in the following paragraphs:

D 8	Archiv	Files and Records.

Under the Dienstamt and designated Ia in the Ministerialabteilung (Ministerial Section), which handles RAD matters in relation to the Ministry of the Interior. It is quite possible that this section was reorganised when the RAD was divorced from the Ministry following the appointment of HIMMLER as its head. Since HIERL now has the rank of a Reich Minister and Cabinet Member the section is probably at his disposal for his work in this capacity.

In 1942 the Dienstamt also directly controlled the following two sections:

The Abteilung für Gesetzgebung u. öffentliches Recht (Section for Legislation and Public Law), which deals with legal matters arising from HIERL's position as Reich Minister.

The Abteilung für auswärtige Angelegenheiten (Section for Foreign Affairs), which serves as liaison agent with the Foreign Office, deals with foreign missions in Germany, and with international organisations and labour services established abroad, disseminates information on the RAD outside Germany and cares for "racial" Germans and German nationals from outside Germany who serve in the RAD.

One source listed this section as Ib and styled it Abteilung für auswärtige Angelegenheiten und Aufklärung (Section for Foreign Affairs and Information).

13. Abteilung Auswärtige Angelegenheiten
(Section for Foreign Affairs; collaborating with Foreign Office and Party Chancellory.)
Abteilungsleiter (Section Chief): Oberstarbeitsführer MÜLLER - BRANDENBURG

14. Abteilung für Versorgung. (Handling also RADwJ affairs)
(Welfare section)
Abteilungsleiter (Section Chief): Oberstarbeitsführer Dr. REINECKE.

33. Höhere RAD Führer (Superior RAD Commanders)

To fulfil the needs of Germany's military leaders, and in order to maintain proper supervision and utilisation of RAD units Höhere RAD Führer (Superior RAD Commanders) were appointed in the field and given complete charge of all RAD units in their Abschnitt (Sector) or Bereich (centrally controlled Works Projects Area).

These Superior RAD Commanders are attached to the respective higher military headquarters: normally either an Army Group or a Luftgau. They are responsible for the directing, training and instruction or the RAD units in their district.

The Superior RAD Commander maintains liaison with the nearest Meldeamt (Registration Branch Office), which is kept informed of the special tasks arising, and the RAD units involved.

The list of identified Superior RAD Commanders given in Annexe D includes the appropriate Meldeamt, as well as the Hauptmeldeamt (Registration Office) to which the Meldeamt is responsible.

34. Bereichsleitung (Regional Control Staffs)

The area coming under the control of a Superior RAD Commander (Abschnitt or Bereich) may embrace one or more Arbeitsgaue (RAD Administrative Areas), and in the case of a larger Arbeitsgau containing more than eight Gruppen, four or five Gruppen are organised into one Bereich, a centrally controlled Works Projects Area.

At the head of each Bereich is a Bereichsführer, with the rank of Oberstarbeitsführer (Colonel). To assist him, each Bereich has a Bereichsleitung (Regional Control Staff).

The primary function of a Bereichsleitung is that of intermediate control between the head office in BERLIN and the forces in the field.

For list of identified Bereichsleitungen see Annexe D.

35. Beauftragte des RAF (C.in C's representatives)

Following the German occupation of Western Europe, portions of Scandinavia and the Baltic States and the German penetration into the Balkans, the Reichsarbeitsdienst was used as an instrument of Nazi policy in these countries.

The immediate mission of the RAD was to train potential non-German labour reserves by setting up similar labour services training adequate native officers and NCO's. Consequently, German RAD instructors were sent out for this purpose.

A close liaison was kept through Beauftragte des RAF (permanent representatives of the Commander-in-Chief of the RAD.)

A list of the countries for which such representatives were appointed, together with the Registration Offices responsible for personnel of the staff, is given in Annexe D.

PART IV

REGIONAL ORGANISATION

36. Inspectorates

On 1 July 1944 it was announced officially by the Commander-in-Chief of the Reichsarbeitsdienst that five Arbeitsdienstinspektionen (RAD Inspectorates) had been created to supervise and control the Arbeitsgaue (RAD Administrative Areas). Their HQ's are still unconfirmed. They are the following:

RAD INSPEKTION	RAD INSPEKTEUR
1 Nordost	Generalarbeitsführer Martin EISENBECK
2 Nordwest	Generalarbeitsführer zur LOYE
3 Mitte	Generalarbeitsführer Karl SIMON
4 Südwest	Generalarbeitsführer Karl SCHMÜCKLE
5 Südost	Generalarbeitsführer Victor BAND

It has not been ascertained whether or not the above named heads of the various inspectorates still retain their posts as Arbeitsgau Commanders, in addition to their new assignments, but at the inception of the newly-created Inspectorates, their commands were as follows:

GAF EISENBECK,	Commander of Arbeitsgau I	Ostpreussen HQ: Königsberg
GAF zur LOYE,	Commander of Arbeitsgau XIX	Niedersachsen-West HQ: Oldenburg

It is quite conceivable that they still function in a dual capacity; both as head of an Inspectorate and as Arbeitsgau Commander.

37. Arbeitsgaue (Administrative Areas)

Regionally, Germany is divided into forty RAD Arbeitsgaue (AG) or Labour Service Administrative Areas, which bear no relation to other territorial divisions of Germany such as governmental administrative regions (Länder, Reichsgaue, Provinzen, etc.), Luftgaue (G.A.F. Districts), Wehrkreise (Corps Areas or Military Districts) or the Gaue (Districts) of the Nazi Party. They most closely resemble, however, those Gaue of the Nazi Party which are also Reichsverteidigungsbezirke (Reich Defence Regions).

Each Arbeitsgau bears a Roman numeral (from I to XXXX) as well as a geographical name.

The Arbeitsgau cover Greater Germany, including all annexed territories such as Eupen, Malmedy, Luxemburg, Alsace-Lorraine, Austria, the Sudetenland, Wartheland, Danzig-Westpreussen, Polish Upper Silesia and Memelland as well as the Protektorat Bohemia-Moravia. They do not include the Government General, however.

38. The Arbeitsgauleitung (Administrative Area HQ)

The HQ of an Arbeitsgau is called an Arbeitsgauleitung (AGL) and is organised along lines analogous to the RAD High Command in BERLIN. It is headed by the Führer d.Arbeitsgau (Commander of the RAD Administrative Area), who is assisted by a Stabsführer (Chief of Staff) and Stabsleiter (Acting Chief of Staff). An Oberstarbeitsführer z.b.V. (Colonel for Special Assignments) is also on the HQ staff of each AGL.

The AGL is divided into Abteilungen (Sections), parallel to the Reichsleitung des Arbeitsdienstes. Normally, they are as follows:

1. Dienstabteilung	Service Section; headed by a Leiter (Director)
2. Personalabteilung	Personnel Section;headed by a Leiter.
3. Abteilung Arbeitsleitung	Section of Planning, Technical Matters and Works; headed by a Leiter who, when actively in command of units is termed Arbeitsführer or Arbeitsleiter. (Works Commander).
4. Verwaltungs-und Wirtschaftsabteilung	Administration and Economic Section; headed normally by an Oberstarbeitsführer (VW). (VW, for Verwaltung.) Originally the rank in the administrative career as well as the function was styled Arbeitsgauverwalter (District Administrator), a term still frequently encountered. This section, is organised into sub-sections headed by Sachbearbeiter ("specialists"), such as those in charge of Unterkunft (Quarters and Billeting), Strafrecht (Penal Law and Discipline), or Verwaltungsrechtliche Angelegenheiten (Administrative legal matters).
5. Abteilung Arbeitseinsatz	Allocation and Projects Section; possibly only in regions where it is deemed necessary; headed by a Leiter.

39. RAD Groups

Each Arbeitsgau (AG) is generally divided into eight RAD Gruppen (Groups). While the strength of a Gruppe may vary from 1,200 to 1,800 men in peace-time, its minimum war-time strength is estimated to be 1,000 men, including officers and permanent staff.

The number of Gruppen formed in each Arbeitsgau is generally dependent upon the size of the district, the density of population and the scope of the projects to be undertaken.

RAD Gruppen are numbered consecutively in Arabic numerals and in series which automatically indicate the Arbeitsgau from which they are levied. The first digit or the first two digits always represent the Arbeitsgau from which the Gruppe originates. Thus the Gruppen numbered 10-19 have their home stations in AG I; those numbered 100-109 in AG X, and those in the series 380-389 in AG XXXVIII.

Several RAD Gruppen have been identified in the 500 series. It may be that new Gruppen have been established with numerical designations deviating from the original scheme, but it is more likely that they were formed for special tasks and numbered arbitrarily as an expedient to meet an irregular situation.

Those units which are attached to the Army or Air Force receive serial numbers preceded by the letter H (for Heer, or Army) and L (Luftwaffe) for the period of their attachment in addition to their regular unit designation.

40. RAD Abteilungen (Detachments)

Each RAD Gruppe comprises in peace-time from four to eight RAD Abteilungen (Detachments). The identified maximum is thirteen and the average is six. During the war, however, this number has been frequently reduced to four and, sometimes, to three detachments.

The Abteilungen are the basic units of the German Labour Service, being described as "the real life cell of the RAD".

RAD Abteilungen have been armed and sent into action on many occasions. For example, motorised RAD Units, consisting mostly of three detachments, were used in the drive on Moscow, and, under the designation of Motorisierter Abschnitt (Motorised Section), under an Arbeitsführer, in the retreat from RZHEV.

In peace-time Abteilungen are quartered in standardised Arbeitslager (Labour Camps), generally one Abteilung to a camp. The term Arbeitslager is protected by law for exclusive use by the Labour Service. However, it is believed that the term is (at least unofficially) in use, also, to designate penal camps. In war-time the locations of Abteilungen change rapidly as these units move from task to task in occupied countries.

RAD Abteilungen bear Arabic numerals, written in conjunction with the number of the RAD Gruppe to which they belong, e.g., 1/240 means the 1st Abt. of Gr. 240.

Detachments committed to action or serving with the regular field forces as occupational auxiliaries, construction units or tactical reserves are termed Kriegsabteilungen. (The letter K generally precedes their regular number, at least for the duration of such attachment, e.g., K3/252),

During 1938 and later, detachments working on the fortifications in the West carried, in addition to their usual numbers, the letters W for West, S for Saar, or R for Rhine, followed by a Roman numeral which probably indicated the sector of the fortifications where they were employed.

In addition to the regular components of an Arbeitsgau, namely Gruppen and their Abteilungen, there is in each Gau a Wachabteilung (Guard Detachment), designated by the letter W preceding the number of the Arbeitsgau written in Arabic numerals. For example, W17 would mean Wachabteilung of Arbeitsgau XVII.

This unit consists mostly of men who have become incapacitated to some extent or who no longer can perform the regular Wehrmacht duties of the Labour Service. The exact function of a Wachabteilung is not known, but as the name implies, it is probably employed in guard duty or other light chores connected with the Arbeitsgau headquarters post.

41. Peacetime Organisation of the Abteilung.

The average peace-time strength of an Abteilung (Detachment) was between 200 and 220 men. The official Stärkenachweisung (Table of Organisation) for a peace-time detachment called for 214 men, in the following proportions:-

1 Oberstfeldmeister
1 Oberfeldmeister
1 Feldmeister
5 Unterfeldmeister (or 2 Unterfeldmeister)
5 Obertruppführer (or 8 Obertruppführer)
1 Oberamtswalter or Amtswalter
8 Truppführer
12 Obervormänner and Vormänner
180 Arbeitsmänner (including 10 volunteers)

214

The detachment was divided into four Züge (platoons) each commanded by an Oberfeldmeister, Feldmeister or Unterfeldmeister.

The platoon split into three Trupps (Squads or Sections), each consisting of:-

1 Obertruppführer or Truppführer
1 Obervormann or Vormann
15 Arbeitsmänner.

It should be noted that when an RAD Detachment has been trained, the fourth platoon is usually split up among the other platoons, increasing their strength.

HQ personnel of the detachment were allotted as follows:-

Abteilungsführer	Detachment Leader	1 Oberstfeldmeister or Feldmeister
Verwaltungsführer	Administrator	1 Oberamtswalter or Amtswalter
Assistent	Assistant	1 Obertruppführer
Quartiermeister	Quartermaster	1 Unterfeldmeister or Obertruppführer
Versorgungsführer oder Unterführer	Supply Officer or NCO	1 Unterfeldmeister or Obertruppführer
Sanitätsführer or Unterführer	Medical Officer or NCO	1 Unterfeldmeister or Obertruppführer.

NOTE: For ranks, see Part V.

42. Wartime Organisation of the Abteilung.

It has been established that Abteilungen have appeared in the field at lesser strength. While the foregoing establishment is likely to be still effective for units inside Germany, at least in theory, documentary evidence shows that the strength of a detachment diminishes when it is drafted outside of Germany proper. It is believed that the average Abteilung of the RAD totals today between 140-150, possibly up to 180 officers and men.

A typical Detachment (as for July 1944) would be organised into four Züge (Platoons), each of 33 all ranks, the platoon splitting into three Trupps (Squads or Sections) each of 1 NCO and 10 men.

The staff typical of an Abteilung with the above strength would nowadays be as follows:

Abteilungsführer with the rank of Oberstfeldmeister.
Stellv. Führer, with the rank of Oberfeldmeister, who was also in command of 1 platoon.
Verwaltungsführer, with the rank of Unterfeldmeister, who had charge of clothing, rations, building materials and construction equipment.
1 Clerk with the rank of Unterfeldmeister, who was responsible for all office work.
2 Cooks
4 or 5 Drivers.

PART V

RANKS AND IDENTIFICATIONS

43. Ranks

Personnel of the RAD are graded as shown in the following table. The ranks of Verwaltungsführer (Administrative Officers) are obsolescent but are still frequently encountered. The new style for, e. g., Amtswalter is Feldmeister (Vw), the abbreviation standing for Verwaltung (Administration).

RAD RANK	WEHRMACHT APPROXIMATION	ABBR.	ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICERS	MEDICAL OFFICERS
1. Arbeitsmann	Soldat	Am
2. Vormann	Gefreiter	Vm
3. Obervormann	Obergefreiter	Ovm
4. Truppführer	Unteroffizier	Tf
5. Obertruppführer	Feldwebel	Otf
6. Unterfeld-	x Oberfähnrich	Ufm
7. Feldmeister	Leutnant	Fm	Amtswalter
8. Oberfeldmeister	Oberleutnant	Ofm	Oberamtswalter	Arbeitslagerarzt
9. Oberstfeldmeister	Hauptmann	Ostfm	Hauptamtswalter	Arbeitsfeldarzt
10. Arbeitsführer	Major	AF or Arbf	Stabsamtswalter	Arbeitsarzt
11. Oberarbeitsführer	Obstlt.	OAF or OArbf	Oberstabsamtswalter	Oberarbeitsarzt
12. Oberstarbeitsführer	Oberst	ObstAF or Ost. Arbf	Oberstamtswalter	Oberstarbeitsarzt
13. Generalarbeitsführer	Gen.Maj.	GAF		Generalarbeitsarzt
14. Obergeneralarbeitsführer	Gen. Lt.	OGAF
15. Reichsarbeitsführer	xx General	RAF

x The RAD rank of Unterfeldmeister is approximately equivalent in status, though not in function, to that of a warrant officer ("Officer's Aspirant").
xx May also be likened to the rank of Feldmarschall or at rate to that of Commander-in-Chief of Party formations (e.g. Reichsführer-SS, etc.).

Ranks from 4-6 inclusive are referred to as Untere-Führung (NCO's) from 7-9 as Mittlere Führung (Intermediate Officers), and 10-15 inclusive as Obere Führung (Senior Officers).

44. Uniforms.

In war-time the uniform of the RAD is olive brown. The insignia of rank are worn on the shoulder straps only and follow the same general pattern as those of the Army, with stars and braiding in the same manner for corresponding ranks.

In addition, collar patches are worn, with narrow or broad silver lacing for the lower and intermediate ranks and a silver or gold ear of grain for officers from the rank of Arbeitsführer upward.

The RAD emblem is a spade-head with two ears of grain protruding diagonally, one on either side of the bottom portion of the spade-head. This RAD emblem is worn on the Feldmütze (Forage Cap). On the upper left sleeve is worn a spade-head pointed down-ward and bearing the number or designation of the unit to which the man belongs. The spade is coloured white, with a thin black border, and the figures are in red.

Personnel coming under the High Command structure wear this emblem with no unit designation.

Members of the Arbeitsgauleitung (Arbeitsgau Command HQ) wear the Gau designation in Roman numerals, while members of the Group Command wear the number of the Gruppe in Arabic numerals.

Personnel of an Abteilung wear the RAD emblem with the Gruppe number and, below, the Abteilung designation, e.g. $\frac{181}{1}$

RAD personnel attending a school, or permanent staff and cadre of a school, bear the RAD emblem with the official abbreviation of the school in question.

A chart showing the Dienstgradabzeichen des Reichsarbeitsdienstes (Insignia of Rank of the Reich Labour Service) appears in Annexe C.

46. The Wehrpass (Record of Service)

The most important personal document in use is the Wehrpass, the permanent service record of each RAD man, which, on pages 6,8,9, and 10, contains the record of his service with the RAD.

On Page 6 (upper half) an entry is made by the registration branch office mustering the man (the mustering for the RAD takes place simultaneously with the mustering for the Armed Forces).

The entry states whether the man is to be called up or whether he had been deferred for special reasons (employment in essential industries, volunteer for the Armed Forces, etc.)

On Page 8 the following details are given:-

(a) Date on which the oath of allegiance to HITLER was sworn in the RAD.

(b) The unit and the serial number with which the man was inducted, the date of his induction, and his rank, the latter being invariably Arbeitsmann.

(c) The dates and particulars of any changes that took place during his term of service, such as promotions, transfer to another detachment, or a change in the serial number of his detachment.

(d) The date of his discharge, the complete number of the unit from which he was discharged, and his rank at that time.

(e) Entries and remarks - during war-time only - indicating in a general way where the man served (Kriegseinsatz); whether his military and general training were incomplete on account of his being called up prematurely by the Armed Forces, etc.

These remarks are usually in the following form:

"Assigned to special duty in the Zone of the Interior within the framework of the Army (Air Force) from..... to...."

(Im besonderen Einsatz im Heimatkriegsgebiet im Rahmen des Heeres (der Luftwaffe) von.... bis...) or "Employed in the theatre of operations beyond the frontiers of the Reich e.g., Russia within the framework of the Army (Air Force) from.... to ... (Eingesetzt im Operationsgebiet jenseits der Reichsgrenze (Russland) im Rahmen des Heeres (der Luftwaffe) von... bis ...

On page 9 will be found the following:-

(a) A remark stating that the man has served, or is regarded as having served, his full term with the RAD.

(b) The offices and the unit concerned with his discharge, namely the registration branch office effecting the discharge and the registration branch office or offices of his birthplace (Heimatamt) and of his residence (Wohnsitzmeldeamt).

(c) The number of the detachment and group from which he was discharged.

On Page 10 are additional entries of a general nature for which there was no room on page 8.

47. Other documents and identifications.

The Bescheinigung über Dienstleistung im Reichsarbeitsdienst (A certificate of service in the RAD) may be encountered.

This is a summary of the service record, giving in an abridged form the same information as contained in the Wehrpass and apparently designed to provide the individual with documentary proof of his service which he may be required to firnish when applying for civil employment or dealing with government authorities.

The Reichsarbeitsdienst - Dienstausweis, while giving considerably more information than the Wehrpass is not likely to be encountered frequently, because it is apparently issued only to the officers of the RAD. It contains data similar to those of a soldier's paybook.

The Reichsarbeitsdienst - Entlassungsschein (Discharge Certificate) lists status when discharged; whereabouts of Wehrpass; pay and clothing particulars and place of discharge. It also includes entries as to permanent residence, and is stamped by the RAD unit and the local police Identity tags of the RAD are issued to all units employed in the field. Such tags give the complete numbers of the unit, the bearer's serial number, and the number of his registration branch office.

PART VI

RECRUITING AND CONSCRIPTION

48. Length of Service

The original period of service in the RAD was set at six months, and made compulsory for all "Aryans" on 26 June 1935. Since that date every young man has had to serve in the RAD prior to his military service, i.e., at the age of eighteen. The age limit was lowered to seventeen in 1942.

In October, 1938, compulsory service in the RAD was introduced into Austria; in October, 1939, into the Sudetenland; in 1941 into Alsace and Luxemburg, and in 1942, into Lorraine.

According to the decrees now in force all men from seventeen to twenty-five years old are liable for this service. But, according to a new regulation of the Reich Minister of Education, issued in the Spring of 1944, students throughout Reich territory who will be starting their studies after their twenty-first birthday will be exempt from the obligation to take part in the RAD or the alternative service for students as from the summer term, 1944, in order to attend a University.

Personnel are known to have entered the Wehrmacht on being dismissed after only two weeks of RAD service. Seventeen-year-old youths from Germany proper who served in the Waffen SS generally went directly to the SS from Wehrertüchtigungslager (Military Fitness Camps) of the Hitler Youth or from their homes. Alsatian boys of the same age, however, are known to have served fully six months in the RAD, as late as May, 1944.

Conversely, periods of service have been lengthened, among RAD units stationed in occupied countries, due to transport difficulties and works projects. (For example, the units attached to DIETL's forces.)

A percentage of the junior NCO's (fixed by the Reichsarbeitsführer) may apply to have their period of service lengthened to 12 months, in order to reduce the number of lower grade officials. Permission is only granted if they are not required by the Army. Officers and Higher NCO's usually make the RAD their profession.

49. Registration Offices and Branches

In accordance with Article 4 of the Reich Labour Service Law, the RAD has its own administrative system for the registration and call-up of those liable for service. This system operates in close conjunction with the recruiting system of the Armed Forces. Its agencies are the Hauptmeldeämter (Registration Offices) and Meldeämter (Registration Branch Offices).

On 1 July 1940 there existed forty-one Registration Offices and 329 Registration Branch Offices. Since that date their number has increased to about 350.

As a rule these Registration Offices are located in the same towns as the headquarters of the Wehrersatzinspektionen (Recruiting Areas); while the Registration Branch Offices, which they control, are in the same places as the Wehrbezirkskommandos (Recruiting Sub-Area Headquarters) of the Wehrmacht.

Each Registration Office generally bears the number of the Arbeitsgau in which it is located; in a few cases where there are two such offices in the same Arbeitsgau the number is followed by an "a". The Registration Offices are indicated by Roman numerals, the Registration Branch Offices carry Arabic numbers.

The Registration Branch Offices appear to have been numbered in series, but so far no completely logical system of numbers has been established.

See Annexe D for the following lists of Registration Offices:-

List 4: Hauptmeldeämter, giving Arbeitsgau and Wehrkreis

List 5: Meldeämter, in numerical order

List 6: Meldeämter, in alphabetical order, giving Arbeitsgau and Wehrkreis.

50. The Calling-Up of Recruits

The Registration Offices and Registration Branch Offices normally call up the new classes on 1 October and 1 April of each year. The Registration Offices decide which men are to be taken into the Labour Service, with due regard to the priorities and exceptions established in favour of volunteers for the Armed Forces and in favour of essential war industries.

The mustering of the men for the RAD is done simultaneously with that for the Armed Forces, a representative of the Registration Branch Office of the RAD being a member of the Musterungsstab (Mustering Staff) of the regular Armed Forces set up in each district by the Wehrbezirkskommando (Wehrmacht Recruiting Sub-Area HQ). Conversely, Wehrmacht officers are attached to the RAD Registration Offices and possibly also their branches.

The Registration Offices have to render periodic strength reports and keep records for the men while they are serving in the RAD. Together with the Registration Branch Offices they form a part of the Personal-Meldewesen (Personnel Registration System) of the police.

In addition, they are responsible for the men to the authorities of the Armed Forces. They transmit Army call-up orders in case the men are called up prematurely, i.e., prior to having completed their RAD term, and they notify the recruiting agencies of the Armed Forces when a man's term of service with the RAD has been completed.

The Heimatamt (Registration Branch Office located in a man's birthplace), the Wohnsitzmeldeamt (that of his residence) and the Einberufungsamt (which calls him up) are known to cooperate in the keeping of personnel records in cases where a man is called up by an office not situated in his birthplace or in his place of permanent residence.

PART VII

TRAINING

51. Routine Training

In 1932 Konstantin HIERL wrote:

"The Labour Service must guard our youth against physical and moral slovenliness. The young German will receive a very valuable preparation for life through physical training, the cultivation of industrious habits, order, punctuality, cleanliness, self-control and obedience.

"The Labour Service School must give the youth of our nation the necessary civic training by inculcating a sense of duty and honour toward the nation and a feeling of social responsibility toward the community."

With these tenets in mind, a typical training programme was instituted as follows:

Reveille in summer at 5 a.m.; in winter at 6 a.m. Ten minutes of physical exercises follow. Then the men have one hour for washing, dressing, bed-making, clean-up and early breakfast. Flag parade follows and the camp leader issues instructions for the day.

The day's work accounted for seven hours, and included the time taken for marching to and from work and thirty minutes for breakfast.

Dinner in summer was served at 1.30 p.m. and in winter at 2.30 p.m. In summer an hour's rest was taken after dinner. The afternoon was devoted exclusively to physical and mental training of the men. Sports, games and marching exercises were carried out on alternate days and lasted for an hour.

After that, daily instruction was given in home politics, German history, current political problems from a Nazi point of view and all subjects of interest to the Labour Service. Brief orders were then issued at 7 p.m.

After supper the evenings were free but twice a week all service men joined in community singing or attended lectures or cinema shows, etc.

Until about 1939 drilling was extensively practiced with the spade, but rifles were substituted after the outbreak of war, captured weapons being frequently used.

After September, 1939, education and training were extended. The young men had five weeks of basic training, as well as physical toughening, labour training, Nazi political instruction and, in the case of units intended to be attached to Army field forces, arms training such as that given in the infantry. A varied assortment of rifles and old model machine guns was used for this purpose.

With the appointment of Dr. GÖBBELS to the newly-created post of Plenipotentiary for Total Mobilization, following the reported attempt on Hitler's life, RAD training was officially announced to have been stepped up "especially along disciplinary and pre-military lines".

52. Responsibilities of Officers.

The ranks, functions and disciplinary authority of Arbeitsdienstführer (Officers) correspond closely to those of Army Officers and non-commissioned officers. It is their duty to drill their men and to organise and supervise the work to which their units are assigned.

Drill and physical labour in peace-time were not regarded as ends in themselves but as practical lessons in National Socialist thinking and living.

The officers, therefore, have the additional mission of indoctrinating the young men with this spirit and strengthening the foundations laid during their boyhood in the Hitler Youth Organisation, in order to give them a "mental and physical bearing that will last for their entire future lives".

This important educational function of RAD officers and the fact that, with the bulk of the men changing every six months, the experience and tradition of the RAD are carried on solely through them were fully recognised by the organisers of the Reich Labour Service. From the outset, therefore, great care was taken to provide an adequate and well trained officer corps.

During wartime, the career of the RAD officer outlined in the following paragraphs is not strictly adhered to. Since a large number of younger officers were transferred to the regular Armed Forces, their places had to be filled with Hilfsausbilder (Auxiliary Trainers), selected from the ranks. However, as the RAD assumed more and more the role of an auxiliary military corps, the demands upon the training and the ability, and even military ability, of its officers have increased considerably.

The officers must be prepared for the manifold assignments resulting from war-time employment of their units; they must be proficient in the use of all infantry weapons and they must even be able to exercise tactical command over their units in combat.

53. Training of Officers - Basic.

In peace-time the training began when the prospective officer returned to the RAD after having served his compulsory two years in the Armed Forces. He then signed a contract for twelve years, but his previous service in the RAD and the Armed Forces counted as 2 years of this term.

The candidate first had to go through a six-month course at a Truppführerschule (NCO School), where he was taught the basic principles of his future profession, the use of tools and the fundamental rules of leadership and command. This course did not include the teaching of political ideology, which was started only in the rank above.

The course at the Truppführerschule ended with an examination and for those who remained in the lower category of officers this constituted all the theoretical training they received. At the same time, passing through this basic school was a prerequisite for all further careers in the RAD.

54. Training of Officers - Intermediate.

After finishing at the Truppführerschule the young officer served a period of practical work with units as is done in the Armed Forces, to prove his ability. If considered suitable, he was permitted to train for the intermediate grades and was sent to a Feldmeisterschule (Officer Candidate School). The Feldmeisterschule in its eight-month course continued the work of the Truppführerschule, teaching more or less the same subjects but in greater detail. In addition, the students were trained in the teaching and dissemination of National Socialist ideology, because, as platoon leaders, they were also to be the "spiritual leaders" of the men.

The principal aim of the Feldmeisterschule was to mould the future RAD officer. "This commander is expected to represent a distinct type as does the German officer, civil servant, or schoolteacher." Thus does Nazi propaganda describe the aim of the school.

By successfully passing the Feldmeisterschule the student qualified for a career in the intermediate grades. He then served for several years as a Zugführer (Platoon Leader), deputy detachment commander, and so on.

After this he was called to a Bezirksschule (Field Officers' School), also called Abteilungsführerschule. At this institution he took a three-month course to polish up his theoretical knowledge, and to prepare himself to assume command of an Abteilung (Detachment).

55. Training of Officers - Senior appointments.

After serving as detachment commanders a small number of men with the highest qualifications were selected for the senior grades to fill the highest posts in the RAD. In preparation for this they were sent to the Reichsschule, the equivalent in the RAD of a General Staff School.

After passing this course they received their promotions in the name of Hitler to the rank of Arbeitsführer (Major). (All ranks from there on are conferred in the Führer's name).

The Reichsschule is at present located in one of the imperial palaces at POTSDAM. The school was founded in May, 1933, and during the first ten years of its existence sixty-two training courses, with a total attendance of 2,400 students, were held there.

Of these courses, thirty-one were for Gruppenführer (Group Commanders), usually holding the rank of Oberarbeitsführer (Lt.Col) with an attendance of 1,400 students.

The average age of these candidate Oberarbeitsführer dropped from forty-three in the year 1933 to thirty-five in 1943.

Between the outbreak of the war and September, 1943, ten war-time courses for Gruppenführer have been held, each lasting about three months.

The first head of the Reichsschule was Generalarbeitsführer (General Major) Otto LANCELLE, who later, as a General Major in the Wehrmacht was killed in Russia. Generalarbeitsführer Hermann KRETSCHMANN succeeded LANCELLE and held the post for seven years. At present the position is believed to be held by Generalarbeitsführer HERZOG.

NOTE: For full list of RAD Schools, with details, see Annexe D, List 7.

PART VIII

RAD SERVICES AND PUBLICATIONS

56. Supply System

The RAD maintains various offices for the supply and equipment of units within Germany proper, normally taken care of through the Arbeitsgau. (the Administrative area).

The Beschaffungsamt (Procurement Office), located in Berlin W 35, Pariser Strasse 44, is the central agency for clothing and equipment for the entire RAD.

In addition, there are five Bekleidungsämter (Clothing Depots) with the following locations:

RAD Bekleidungsamt Berlin:
Berlin NO. 55,
Greifswalder Strasse 212/213
Telephone: Königstadt, E.3, 3544.

RAD Bekleidungsamt Fuerth:
Fuerth i. Bay.,
Kurgartenstrasse 1.

RAD Bekleidungsamt Braunschweig:
Braunschweig,
Pippelweg 1
Telephone: Braunschweig 1225.

RAD Bekleidungsamt Marburg/Lahn:
Barfüsser Tor 1.

RAD Bekleidungsamt Salzburg:
Klessheimer Alle 35.

One Zeugamt (Equipment Depot) is located in Magdeburg, Blankenburgerstr. 21.

During the period in which an RAD unit is attached to the Wehrmacht, the Reich Labour Service remains responsible for the replacement and supply of clothing and equipment. When an RAD unit is committed to action, the supply of arms and weapons is taken care of by the Wehrmacht supply system.

In addition, the Wehrmacht is responsible for the economic and medical care of the Reich Labour Service units subordinate to it.

This rather complex structure is commonly referred to as Doppelorganisation (Double Organisation).

57. Supply in the Field

For the supply of clothing and equipment to RAD units committed to action the following establishments exist. (FN's are Feldnachschublager (Field Supply Depots). The following list also shows the Hauptmeldeamt (Registration Office) to which these establishments belong, the appropriate Meldeamt (Branch Registration Office), and the Arbeitsgau in which they are located.

58. Health Service

The RAD maintains its own Lazarette (Hospitals), in addition to sick wards at lower echelons. Grossheilstuben (Main Sick Wards) are maintained at Arbeitsgau level for those cases not serious enough to be sent to RAD hospitals.

Gruppenheilstuben (Group Sick Wards) are administered by many individual RAD Groups, while Heilstuben (Sick Wards) are maintained by most Abteilungen. The individual in charge is usually the Sanitäts Unteroffizier (Medical Non-commissioned officer) of the unit.

A list of hospitals and sick wards identified, with details, will be found in Annexe D. (List 8).

59. Official Publications.

The RAD publishes the regulations issued by bureau of the Reich Directorate (Reichsleitung), memoranda on conferences and conventions, and orders issued by the Arbeitsgauleitung (Area Headquarters) or Gruppen (groups), by means of Umdruckerlasse (Mimeographed Circulars).

Verordnungsblatt (The Journal of Decrees) contains orders and regulations issued by the Reicharbeitsführer. This publication appears at irregular intervals in two editions, A and B. Edition A contains orders of a permenent character while edition B gives instructions of lesser importance. The Verordnungsblatt also covers RAD/M and RADwJ. It contains two annexes which list changes in personnel, one for the RAD/M on yellow paper and one for RADwJ on blue paper.

Up to the end of 1941 eleven volumes of the Verordnungsblatt had been issued. Their subject matter has been classified and regrouped in special handbooks (Zusammenstellungen) issued by the Bureau of the Reich Directorate.

Dienstanweisungen und Dienstvorschriften (General Orders and Service Regulations) are issued under the authority of the Reich Labour Commander and constitute the basic rules of the RAD. Up to the end of 1941 only twenty-five of these rather voluminous general orders appear to have been issued.

PART IX

THE REICH LABOUR SERVICE FOR WOMEN (RADWJ)

60. General

The proceeding parts of this handbook have been mainly concerned with the RAD/M or RAD for men. In order to complete the picture of the Reich Labour Service this chapter gives a general description of the RADwJ (Reichsarbeitsdienst der weiblichen Jugend or Labour Service for Women).

Owing to lack of sufficient documents and because the RAD women's branch is not as important as its male counterpart, this chapter should be considered as a supplement not an exhaustive analysis.

The RADwJ numbers about half the membership of the RAD for men, but it constitutes a network inside Germany which might prove to be a definite obstacle to Allied disarmament control and counter-intelligence measures.

The RADwJ is organized on strictly military lines and its permanent members at least are among the Führer's most fanatically devoted followers. It maintains at least 2,200 headquarters and installations in Greater Germany. Its Stammpersonal (Permanent Staff) totals not less than 10,000 women whose servility to Nazi dogmas exceeds that of many men in the Reich, and its total strength is likely to be considerably more than 100,000 women who have also been imbued with the doctrines of the Nazi party.

61. The Weibliche Pflichtjahr (Year of Duty for Women)

Until the outbreak of the war the RADwJ was conducted on a voluntary basis (from April, 1936, onward as an incorporated branch of the RAD proper and therefore as a state formation.) In 1936 its membership numbered about 10,000, and until that time only those girls who intended to study at a university had to serve six months of compulsory labour service following their final examination and graduation from secondary schools.

In 1938 the Weibliche Pflichtjahr (Year of duty for women) was introduced for all unmarried women under 25 years of age. This meant either serving on farms or with families. Since 1939, 300,000 girls are reported to have served this duty year, about half of them on agrarian establishments and half as housewives' assistants. Girls employed in the armament and chemical industries have their duty year deferred. Those serving their Pflichtjahr live mostly in common billets, although some are quartered in private homes. They are assigned to employment by the Government Labour Offices, which are assisted in this respect by the municipal and regional educational authorities.

The young women, though officially drafted into what is referred to as "domestic service" are now allocated primarily to farms, their work being at least partly agricultural, and including such duties as dairy work and other forms of manual labour.

This system is mainly intended to aid women who in war time must run the farms for their soldier husbands and to lighten the burden on married women with large families both in rural and industrial areas.

In practice the duty year affects almost exclusively young women normally engaged in office and factory work, the majority of other girls being exempted.

62. Strength and Duties of the RADwJ.

In 1938 the RADwJ membership totalled more than 30,000. At the outbreak of the war, labour service was made compulsory for all unmarried girls of the classes of 1914 to 1922 inclusive, and the strength of the formation, which at that time was about 36,000 was to be increased to 150,000.

By 1941 the actual membership had reached 100,000. The prescribed weekly work time was officially fixed at forty-five hours (forty-one in winter), but in 1942 was stepped up to fifty-one hours.

The girls were "to give practical help and spiritual comfort and to furnish political and ideological enlightenment".

Their main tasks were as follows:

(1) Helping with the harvest.

(2) Assisting in the Nationalsozialistische Volkswohlfahrt (NSV or National Socialist People's Welfare Organisation) in caring for the wounded and in the resettlement or "repatriation" of "racial" Germans from the Baltic States and e.g. Volhynia.

(3) Assisting in the furnishing of homes for evacuees from such regions as the Western front.

63. The Kriegshilfsdienst (War Auxiliary Service for Women)

On 29 July 1941 HITLER ordered that young women, after completing their labour service, were to serve for another six months in the Kriegshilfsdienst (War Auxiliary Service). Those conscripted in the spring serve normally seven months in the RAD and five in the War Auxiliary Service, while girls mustered in the autumn generally serve five months in the RADwJ and seven in the War Auxiliary Service. In the winter of 1941/42 the Kriegshilfsdienst totalled about 47,000 young women. Their employment in the War Auxiliary Service during that season was as follows:

61% served with the Armed Forces, public authorities and transport companies.

33% served in hospitals, with the NSV and the KLV (Kinderlandverschickung, or Children Evacuation Scheme.)

4% served with families as household assistants. Others served as auxiliary school teachers, especially in the East.

By April, 1942, however, this had changed, most likely in accordance with the requirements of the German spring offensive. Official reports cite the following figures for the subsequent employment of the women's Kriegshilfsdienst:

60% served in offices and plants of the war industry, in munitions and ordnance depots and in transport.

13% served in offices and administrative branches of the Armed Forces, in army equipment stores, medical stores, and some worked as Nachrichtenhelferinnen (signal auxiliaries) in the zones adjoining the front, in occupied regions and at home.

11% worked as nurses' aides in military and civilian hospitals and recuperation centres.

5% worked in the institutions of the NSV

11% worked for the Reichsbahn (State Railways), the Reichspost (Postal Administration) and various German Government offices in occupied countries.

64. Later developments of the Kriegshilfsdienst.

By the end of 1942 the strength of the War Auxiliary Service had risen to 130,000. In November 1943 it was announced officially that 226,000 young women were employed in the Kriegshilfsdienst. The service continued to remain quite flexible in its organisation and employment in order to adapt itself to the changing requirements of the Nazi was effort.

More recent reports indicate that in the autumn of 1943 a further step was taken to obtain more women for war service. While maintaining some connection with the RADwJ, girls were drafted into the Luftwaffe at an accelerated pace (in den aktiven Arbeitsdienst verpflichtet, i.e. obliged to serve in the active Labour Service). They were also employed in the anti-aircraft defences and as roof spotters.

Nevertheless, almost 90% of all the women in the RADwJ as late as spring 1944 were still employed in agriculture, more and more of their work consisting of hard menial tasks.

65. Organisation.

The central administration of the RADwJ is divided into various semi-independent bureaux and sections subordinated to the RAD High Command. In some cases the bureau of the RAD proper administers both the male and female branches.

The regional organisation, on the other hand, is quite separate from the RAD for men. Greater Germany is divided into 29 Bezirke (administrative regions) which originally corresponded to the area of the Landesarbeitsämter (labour allocation offices of the Länder of States) and which in some cases have their boundaries in common with the Arbeitsgaue of the male RAD.

The Hauptmeldeämter (Registration Offices) and Meldeämter (Registration Branch Offices) of the RAD/M also handle conscription for the RADwJ.

Each Bezirk is headed by a Bezirksführerin, normally with the rank of Stabshauptführerin, the highest rank of the RADwJ. A woman lawyer is specially appointed to each Bezirk to deal with disciplinary matters.

For list of the Bezirke with H.Q. locations and commanders, see Annexe D, List 9.

A Bezirk comprises on the average seven Lagergruppen (camp groups), each of them under the command of a Stabsführerin.

In 1942 A camp group consisted of about 15 Lager (camps), their strength varying from forty-one to eighty-one young women.

About 300 such camps existed in 1939 and 2,100 by 1943. They are run on semi-military lines.

Critics have termed the conditions prevailing as "comparable to prison life".

Lager are either Kleinlager (small camps), Normallager (standard camps) or Grosslager (large camps).

They are, according to size, organised into three to six Kameradschaften (comradeships), their personnel, including Stammpersonal (permanent staff), numbers forty-one, fifty-four and eighty-one respectively.

The all-feminine establishment for a Normallager is as follows:

1 Lagerführerin (Commandant)
1 Gehilfin d. Lagerführerin (Assistant Commandant)
1 Wirtschaftsgehilfin (Administration Assistant)
1 Verwalterin (Administrator)
2 Jungführerinnen (Junior Leaders)
4 Kameradschaftsälteste (seniors of comradeships)
44 Arbeitsmaiden (Privates)

66. Schools of the RADwJ.

The training of women Labour Service officers is conducted at the following RADwJ Schools, each of which is headed by a Leiterin (Directress).

RADwJ Reichsschule (National Academy for Senior Women Officers).

This institution is located at Waldzieversdorf, Kreis Lebus in the Mark Brandenburg. It was formerly at Finowfurt üb Eberswalde.

According to one report, there were twenty-six RADwJ schools in Germany in the spring of 1944. The foregoing table accounts for twenty-four.

67. Fulltime Officers of the RADwJ.

All German girls up to fifteen years of age who have had a secondary school education are eligible for the career of a full-time professional RAD-Führerin (Woman Officer in the RADwJ.) However, if the young woman has not had the prescribed education, she may compensate this shortcoming by attending one of the numerous courses at an RAD school.

The majority of women officers rise from the ranks and all must contract to serve a minimum of three years. Release from the 3 year service can only be effected through marriage.

Each prospective woman officer first serves six months as an Arbeitsmaid (Private) in the regular RADwJ and another six months as an NCO.

Subsequently she attends a course of three to five months duration at a Lagerschule (LS, or camp school)

Graduation entitles her normally to an appointment as woman officer and she may take over, for example, the function of an assistant camp commandant. She attends a three-month course at a Bezirksschule (BS, or District School), after, having proved herself efficient at her job.

After completing this course she may become a Lagerführerin (Camp Commandant). As such she leads approximately fifty young women, heading a small staff of assistants and permanent service NCO's. She may also become a member of the teaching or administrative staff at an RAD school or be employed in a purely administrative capacity.

Young graduate lawyers, physicians and other professional women are urged to volunteer for the careers of senior RADwJ officers. Those of the latter who have served for four years or more receive a government marriage grant of RM 500 to 2,000.

Upon completion of ten years of RADwJ service they are entitled to either preferential Government employment or a cash bonus of RM 5,000. Those reaching the age of forty-five or having served twenty-five years have been promised pension privileges. Upon death, annuities may also be approved for their dependents.

69. Uniforms

The women in the Labour Service wear a two-piece brown uniform consisting of a skirt and jacket, and a belt of brown cloth. The collar of the uniform is a two-tone colour, the back portion being a dark brown, usually edged with a Kragenkordel (Collar Braid).

Beneath the jacket the women wear a white blouse, with a circular brooch bearing the RAD insignia.

On their felt hat, which is in the same colour as the uniform they wear a Hutabzeichen (Hat Insignia) on the right side toward thw front. For ranks 1 and 2 the insignia is of iron; for 3 to 5 of bronze; for 6 and 7, of silver, and the three highest ranks, 8 to 10, of gold.

The arm band, in the form of a shield, bears the number of the Bezirk superimposed in Roman numerals. The arm bands of the intermediate ranks (4 to 7) are of silver while the leaders wear gold.
